Employment traps

Every summer vacation, many students look for summer jobs hoping to get pocket money and working experience. With limited life experience and an eagerness to seek jobs, students often fall prey to scammers' employment traps which cheat them out of money, steal their personal data or even make them carry out illegal activities.

When facing unfamiliar recruitment processes and procedures, students should stay alert and exercise caution. Before taking up any job offer, they should understand the nature of the job thoroughly and assess whether they can meet the job requirements.

They should never be tempted by an exceptionally high salary or they may get cheated out of money or end up committing crimes. Many students take any job that happens to come their way. They should pay attention to industrial safety and avoid taking up dangerous work, such as construction work, the operation of heavy machinery, handling of chemicals and corrosive substances, work processes involving extremely high temperature, etc. They should also make use of the safety equipment provided by employers and strictly follow all safety regulations.

Stay alert when seeking jobs. Watch out for employment traps.

Tip 1: Watch out for offers that are too attractive

Tip 2: Take good care of personal safety, personal data and belongings

Tip 3: Find out about your employer and study the employment contract

Tip 4: Be informed about current affairs and be ready to seek help
